Position of the Line

- The line should ideally stay above the dog's back.
- This positioning helps reduce the chance of tripping, tangling, or dragging along the ground unnecessarily.

Tension on the Line:

- Aim for a neutral line—not too tight, not too slack (see above).
- This helps your dog learn how to stay within range without relying on leash pressure to guide them.

How to Collect the Line:

- Try to let the extra line drag loosely at your side when calling your dog back and fourth.
- Only gather extra slack by holding the handle and the end of the leash to create a large loop when heeling.
- Avoid bunching or wrapping the line around your hand to prevent accidents and maintain fluid movement.
